Summary

After the realization set in that I am not going to make it big as a blues drummer (I wasn't close), I started spending my time to practice visual art along with 4 years of engineering which gave me enough prowess to continue my exploration into blending technology with the art of storytelling.

It was late 2014 when I stumbled upon VR and realized the immense potential of this medium to change the way we perceive the world.

After 3 years of creating VR films, ads and immersive experiences I get as excited as I used to, back when I started Liminal VR. Working with leaders to help them think differently and inspire them about the immense value that VR creates for businesses/consumers is what motivates me to continue to be a part of the ever evolving VR industry.

I am also focused on putting my passion and skills to good use by supporting organizations and projects that I really care about. Whether its producing VR documentaries for organizations working on natural disasters, women rights and LGBTQ or using VR for interpersonal transformation.

If you believe that I can help you or you want to know more about VR please get in touch.
